If an ideal thermally conductive blackbody were the same distance from the Sun as Earth is, it would have a temperature of about 5.3 °C. However, because Earth reflects about 30% of the incoming sunlight, this idealized planet's effective temperature (the temperature of a blackbody that would emit the same amount of radiation) would be about -18 °C. The surface temperature of this hypothetical planet is 33 °C below Earth's actual surface temperature of approximately 14 °C. The mechanism that produces this difference between the actual surface temperature and the effective temperature is due to the atmosphere and is known as the greenhouse effect.

The diagram illustrates the energy balance of Earth. It shows three layers: the Sun, the atmosphere, and the Earth's surface.

- Solar Radiation: 235 W/m² is absorbed by Earth. 67 W/m² is reflected back to space, and 168 W/m² is absorbed by the surface.
- Atmosphere: 195 W/m² of thermal radiation is emitted into space. 324 W/m² of heat and energy is emitted from the atmosphere back to the surface.
- Surface: 40 W/m² is directly radiated from the surface to space. 350 W/m² is absorbed by greenhouse gases, which then re-radiates 452 W/m² back to the surface.
- Greenhouse Effect: A dashed green circle labeled 'The Greenhouse Effect' highlights the process where greenhouse gas absorption and re-radiation contribute to warming the surface.
- Surface Temperature: The Earth's land and ocean surface is warmed to an average of 14°C.
